SENATOR POMEROY. How His Life Was Saved-His Re turn for the Good Deed.

In that famous campaign known as "The Wakarusa war" Col. Alexander W. Jones was on the staff of Gen. David R. Atchison, who had charge of the pro-slavery forces. It was on the Wakarusa that an incident occurred which caused Senator Pomeroy to ever afterward hold Jones in grateful remembrance. Pomeroy, says a correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Demoerat, had made his appearance in Kansas a short time before, and, representing the New years ago, and now known in Europe as England emigration aid society, he had scattered Sharp's rifles and incendiary abolition sentiments with considerable effect. Atchison heard so much about the bad influence of this new abolition leader that as he marched into Kansas he offered a good round sum for Pomeroy, dead or alive, and issued a proclamation to that effect.

Jones, who had knocked about on both sides of the border, knew Pomeroy, and he was about the only one in Atchison's command who did. One day there came into camp a scouting party, bringing a prisoner. As usual they went at once to headquarters. Atchison had been trying to get some sleep, and the arrival aroused him. He raised himself up from the blanket, and, with anything but good humor, looking at Pomeroy, demanded: "Who in -are you?" "Stranger," replied Pomeroy, raising his hands in a deprecatory way, "I'm an humble follower of the meek and lowly Master."

"____you," said Atchson, feeling around in his blanket, "I believe you are one of these "Stranger," drawled Pomeroy, "please don't take the name of the Lord in vain." Atchison found what he was looking for, and, raising the bottle to his lips, drank. "Jones!" called Atchison. Then for the time Pomeroy saw his acquaintance, and his face showed that he thought his last hour had a success.

The young Virginian and the Yankee abolitionist walked to the edge of the camp. Jones

"I'll not forget you," said Pomeroy, looking a volume, and they parted. To this time Gen. Atchison has never known that he had in its hands the man upon whose head he had set a price, and who certainly would have been hanged that day on the Wakarusa had the Virginian revealed the identity of the prisoner.
At last Col. Jones was captured and sent on to Washington for disposition. His case was to be a kind of precedent for dealing with Price's On the way Jones made terms with his the Princess theater in London the play is didn't go to the old Capitol prison. They set out to find some of the prisoners' friends, and the first one they found was Judge Stanton, whom Jones had known years before as a member of the Kansas Territorial court. And the next acquaintance the former staff officer of Gen. Atchison renewed was with Pomeroy, then the head and front of the Kansas contingent of statesmen at Washington. "Pomeroy," said Stanton, presenting the rather unkempt-looking rebel from Missouri, "here's a man you ought to remember." "Yes," replied Pomeroy, "the face is certainly familiar, but I don't quite place him."

AN AMERICAN GIRL IN SPAIN. The Strange Career of Miss Hensler and Her Influence Over the Late Dom Fernando.

From the Paris American Register. The remarkable romance of an American woman was called to mind by the cable dispatch some days ago announcing the death of Dom Fernando, of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. The widow who survives him was a Miss Hensler, of Boston-a singer of great repute twenty-five Countess d'Edla. Dom Fernando once held the regency of Portugal and was offered the throne of Spain, but declined it. His palace, known as the Convent at Cintra, and described by Byron in the opening of "Childe Harold," is one of the most picturesque in Europe. He was democratic in his taste, and when at his prime enjoyed life at the expense of some of the rules of the strictest code of morality.

Miss Hensler, of Boston, was a young woman of many rare accomplishments and great beauty. She was a friend of the poet Longiel-low, and was respected and admired by the foremost people of her native city. Having a superb voice she went to opera, and in 1856 sang in New York the role of Donna Eloisa in "Don Giovanni." Later she appeared in the Grand Opera House at Lisbon. Dom Fernando had been a widower for several years, and was then regent of Portugal. He was enamored of her and had her made court singer. This ended her career on the stage and she was never again heard in America. A woman there describes her first meeting with Miss Hensler: Hensler: Hensier:

"In September, 1863, I was on my way to Spain, and when I arrived at Bordeaux I noticed that there was a Portuguese man-of-war in port. On the first day out from Bordeaux I was assigned the second place at the table on the right of the captain, as I had been commended to him as the Brazilian correspondent of one of the leading London journals. The first position tion were easy and indicated a person of education and position. There were in the first saloon an international mixture of Frenchmen, Italians, Germans, Englishmen and Americans.

During our first stage of four days from Bordeaux to Lisbon I heard this lady converse with her fellow passengers in the four languages represented by the nationalities above mentioned. On our second day out, while conversing with a fellow passenger, and seated on the main promenade of the steamer, I fell into a rambling talk about various persons in the Old and New World. Among the latter we talked much about Longfellow and while remaining the latter were stalked much New World. Among the latter we talked much about Longfellow, and, while we were conversing, I observed the lady referred to above not far from us, busily plying her needle. Our conversation had nothing to conceal, and we probably talked in a rather loud voice, for, after my companion had gone away, the lady turned to me and said: 'I accidentally heard you speak of Mr. Longfellow. Do you know him?' Upon my affirmative reply she told me that both he and Mr. Thomas Appleton were great friends of hers in America. Her further conversation showed me that she was acquainted with the very best people of Boston and vicinity.

"Before we arrived at Lisbon I was informed that the lady in question was Miss Hensler, that the lady in question was Miss Hensler, who was said to have an acknowledged liaison of the most intimate nature with Dom Fernando, the father of the king of Portugal. Dom Fernando was in the Portugese man-of-war at Bordeaux. On arriving at Lisbon one of the royal barges came for her, and her baggage was exempted from customs and custom house officials. MOVING TO INTRODUCE THE NEW TIMESYSTEM INTO CANADA. making considerable progress in Canada. The Canadian institute of Toronto, and, it is understood several associations for the promotion of different branches of science in the eastern part of the Dominion, observe this method in marking the progress of time. Members of the Canadian institute were notified to attend the last meeting of that body at 20 o'clock. This would mean, according to the 24 o'clock system, commencing the day at 1 o'clock a. m., 8 o'clock in the evening. This system, while it has the disadvantage of being extremely confusing at first, has many advantages over the a. m. and p. m. system almost universally in use at the present time.

The 24 o'clock system is peculiarly suitable for railways in the time tables of which frequently arises much confusion, regarding the corresponding hours before and after noon. Accidents on Canadian railways have often been attributed to the difficulty in clearly indicating on time tables the running time of railway Some railways have adopted the plan of print ing the figures on the time tables relating to afternoon and morning, in black and white faced figures respectively. In some instances this has proved more misleading than the mode of placing the letters "p.m." and "a.m." to indicate before and a terrecontrol of the letters o cate before and a ternoon trains on account o the impress not being a— in as was intended.

Most all railway men in Canada agree on the superiority of the 24 o'clock time system for railroads, and it is understood arrangements are being made to introduce it on the main and branch line of the Canadian Pacific railway at an early date.

Mr. Sanford Fleming, formerly chief engineer of the Dominion government, and the leading civil engineer in Canada, has labored long and earnestly for the general introduction of this new system of time. He was one of the first to advocate a standard time in a paper road before the Canadian Institute many years. read before the Canadian Institute many years ago, and now he is doing much to promote and introduce the 24 o'clock time system for railway and other services. Mr. Fleming is of the opinion that no sconer has this system of time been given a fair trial by some line of railway than its advantages will become so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways in the world will be come so very and the railways in the world will be come so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways in the world will be come so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways in the world will be come so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways in the world will be come so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways in the world will be come so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways in the world will be come so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways in the world will be come so very apparent to the most casual observer that all the railways. new time system would be invaluable in reck-oning the number of days to be occupied by the Five added to 20 is a gain of 25 per cent; given any sum of figures, the doubling of it is an addition of 100 per cent. But the moment the change is a decreasing calculation the inexperienced mathematician betrays himself, and even the expert is apt to stumble or go astray. An advance from 20 to 25 is an increase of 25 per cent; but the reverse of this, that is, a decline from 25 to 20, is a decrease of only 20 per cent. There are many persons, otherwise intelligent, who cannot see why the reduction of 100 to 50 is not a decrease of 100 per cent if an advance from 50 to 100 is an increase of 100 per cent. The other day an article of merchandise which had been purchased at 10 cents a pound was resold at 30 cents a pound, a profit of 200 per cent; where upon a writer, in chronicling the sale, said that, at the beginning of the recent depression, several invoices of the same class of goods which had cost of over 30 cents per pound, a loss of over 200 per cent. Of course, there cannot be a decrease or loss of more than 100 per cent, because this wipes out the whole of the investment. An advance of from 10 to 30 is a gain of 200 per cent; but a decline from 30 to 10 is a loss of only 66% per cent.
